Joseph Koroma who one of the eight finalists who contested in the National category general prize award of (Old Note) Le100,000,000.00 in September this year

In an exclusive interview, Joseph said: "In my country, mortality rate is high and the main factor is the limited availability of blood banks. So I am hoping that this project will address the problem of acute shortage of blood in the country's health care system."

It must be underscored that at the national level, Orange Sierra Leone has been organizing the Orange Social Venture Prize (OSVP) competition. The 4th Edition was held on the 1st September, 2022 in which eight (8) finalists participated for a whopping sum of One Hundred and Fifty Million Leones (Le150M).

According to the Head of Public Relations at Orange SL, Annie Wonnie Katta, Orange is positioned to be the lead digital partner for startups in Africa and the Middle East. This is why Orange Middle East & Africa (OMEA) initiated OSVP some 12 years ago to reward the best technological projects with positive impact and solution to social challenges mainly in the area of education, health, agriculture, mobile payments or sustainable development in Africa and the Middle East.

Currency depreciations risk intensifying global food, energy crisis

From Cover

In their press release dated October 26, 2022, World Bank revealed that in dollar terms, the prices of most commodities have declined from their recent peaks amid concerns of an impending global recession.

"From the Russian invasion of Ukraine in February 2022 through the end of last month, the price of Brent crude oil in U.S. dollars fell nearly 6%. Yet, because of currency depreciations, almost 60% of oil-importing emerging-market and developing economies saw an increase in domestic-currency oil prices during this period. Nearly 90% of these economies also saw a larger increase in wheat prices in local-currency terms compared to the rise in U.S. dollars".

Quoting the market report, World Bank indicated that elevated prices of energy commodities that serve as inputs to agricultural production have been driving up food prices, adding that during the first three quarters of 2022, food-price inflation in South Asia averaged more than 20%.

Further mentioned in the release is the food price inflation in other regions, including Latin America and the Caribbean, the Middle East and North Africa, Sub-Saharan Africa, and Eastern Europe and Central Asia, averaged between 12 and 15%. East Asia and the Pacific has been the only region with low food-price inflation, partly because of broadly stable prices of rice, the region's key staple

"Although many commodity prices have retreated from their peaks, they are still high compared to their average level over the past five years," said Pablo Saavedra, the World Bank's Vice President for Equitable Growth, Finance, and Institutions. "A further spike in world food prices could prolong the challenges of food insecurity across developing countries. An array of policies is needed to foster supply, facilitate distribution, and support real incomes."

According to the World Bank statement, since the outbreak of the war in Ukraine, energy prices have been quite volatile but are now expected to decline. After surging by about 60% in 2022, energy prices are projected to decline 11% in 2023. Despite this moderation, energy prices next year will still be 75% above their average over the past five years. The release captured the price of Brent crude oil which is expected to average $92 a barrel in 2023—well above the five-year average of $60 a barrel. Both natural gas and coal prices are projected to ease in 2023 from record highs in 2022. However, by 2024, Australian coal and U.S. natural-gas prices are still expected to be double their average over the past five years, while European natural gas prices could be nearly four times higher. Coal production is projected to significantly increase as several major exporters boost output, putting climate-change goals at risk.

"The combination of elevated commodity prices and persistent currency depreciations translates into higher inflation in many countries," said Ayhan Kose, Director of the World Bank's Prospects Group and EFI Chief Economist, which produces the Outlook report. "Policymakers in emerging market and developing economies have limited room to manage the most pronounced global inflation cycle in decades. They need to carefully calibrate monetary and fiscal policies, clearly communicate their plans, and get ready for a period of even higher volatility in global financial and commodity markets."

The prosse also mentioned that agricultural prices are expected to decline 5% next year. Wheat prices in the third quarter of 2022 fell nearly 20% but remain 24% higher than a year ago. The decline in agricultural prices in 2023 reflects a better-than-projected global wheat crop, stable supplies in the rice market, and the resumption of grain exports from Ukraine. Metal prices are projected to decline 15% in 2023, largely because of weaker global growth and concerns about a slowdown in China.

The outlook for commodity prices is subject to many risks. Energy markets face significant supply concerns as worries about the availability of energy during the upcoming winter will intensify in Europe. Higher-than-expected energy prices could feed through to non-energy prices, especially food, prolonging challenges associated with food insecurity. A sharper slowdown in global growth also presents a key risk, especially for crude oil and metals prices.

"The forecast of a decline in agricultural prices is subject to an array of risks," said John Baffes, Senior Economist in the World Bank's Prospects Group. "First, export disruptions by Ukraine or Russia could again interrupt global grain supplies. Second, additional increases in energy prices could exert upward pressure on grain and edible oil prices. Third, adverse weather patterns can reduce yields; 2023 is likely to be the third La Niña year in a row, potentially reducing yields of key crops in South America and Southern Africa."

Concerns about a possible global recession next year have already contributed to a sharp decline in copper and aluminum prices. A Special Focus section of the report examines the drivers of aluminum and copper prices and explores implications for emerging market and developing economies that export these commodities. Prices will likely remain volatile as the energy transition unfolds and demand shifts from fossil fuels to renewables, which will benefit some metal producers. Metal exporters can make the most of the resulting opportunities for growth over the medium term while limiting the impact of price volatility by ensuring they have well-designed fiscal and monetary policy frameworks, the report highlights.

August 10 protest: Special Investigative Committee lays out objectives

By Alfred Koroma

After the August 10 brutal protest, President Julius Maada Bio set up a Special Investigative Committee to look into the death of citizens, who lost their lives in the ugly incident and bring to law persons who attacked and killed police officers and their collaborators.

Overall, the Committee said it will examine both the immediate and underlying causes, sources of financing, execution, and consequences of the incidents as well as the response of the security forces.

This, according to the Committee would be done through public hearings in Freetown and the provinces with an interface with the security sector.

Committee also highlighted its specific objectives in a press release published on Wednesday, 26 October, saying it will specifically examine the preparedness of the security forces in terms of intelligence gathering, processing and response; identify and investigate key planners, organisers and financiers of the protest and recommend policies, programmes and actions for both the short-term and long-term to prevent such occurrence.

The Committee which is headed by Emmanuel Saffa Abdulai Esq was set up over a month ago to look into the killings during August 10 protest. The deadly incident happened on the last day of a three days sit-at-home strike action declared by what police referred to as 'faceless people.'

It was a blistering Wednesday morning – protesters took to the street in the Eastern part of Freetown and in different parts of the North of the country with placards in hands, chanting: "Bio must go. We need justice. We need freedom. We need peace."

The 'faceless' protest resulted into bloody clashes between police officers and protesters, leading to the death of civilians and security personnel. Over 30 people died, including six police officers, bluntly attacked and killed by the protesters.

In the initial stage of the protest, social media footages emerged, showing the protesters blocking roads, burning tires, raging at police officers and torturing them to death. They burned down police stations and destroyed government vehicles. The Police struck back by firing teargas and live bullets at the said protesters.

The incident drew wide condemnation locally and internationally and led to heightened security measures in the country.

In his national broadcast two days later, President Bio said the unrest was pre-meditated, well-planned, financed, and executed with shocking brutality. He did not specifically mention any individual name, but appeared very inflexible on the thought that the main opposition All Peoples Congress (APC) is responsible for the violence.

He said before August 10, the anti-government protesters had severally identified themselves on social media as APC Warriors, PPP, and persons who are determined to capture political power even at the cost of hundreds of lives.

But the main opposition issued a press release condemning the violence and distancing itself from it. Senior members of the party, including the former President also condemned it.

MPs to receive M-10 Lenovo Tablets

By Alfred Koroma

M10 Lenovo Tablets to be distributed to each MP of the Sierra Leone Parliament, says Dr. Abass Bundu, Speaker of Parliament.

The Speaker made the disclosure in the Well of Parliament during a brief session on Wednesday. The distribution of the tablets is part of a reform to move into an E-Parliament System.

"In order for us to move to the E-Parliament system, it is proposed to buy Wi-Fi Modems that all of you will be using to connect to the Lenovo M-10 tablets which will be distributed to you shortly," the Speaker told MPs.

He said the move is to enable MPs access all parliamentary documents within and outside the House of Parliament.

Lenovo M10 tablet is a touchscreen display device that can be used to read documents, books and with other variety of applications. The tablet was launched in 2018.

"MPs will be allowed to take the tablets away with them as personal properties when leaving their seats in Parliament.

The Parliament of Sierra Leone

But they will pay for the tablets to enable the House replenish those taken away for members coming in after election," Dr Bundu said.

Meanwhile, MPs have been requested to fill an online data gathering form to identify the Wi-Fi internet strength base in their constituencies.

Data signal strength assessment is also being done on all mobile companies in the country to ascertain Wi-Fi internet coverage in MPs various constituencies so that they can access parliamentary documents while in their constituencies, the Speaker said.

Proposed PR elections: NEW demand explanations

By Alhaji Haruna Sani

In an open letter to the chairman of the Electoral Commission of Sierra Leone (ECSL), the National Elections Watch (NEW) has expressed concerns, demanding public explanation on the status of the August 2022 boundary delimitation exercise and the reasons for the proposed change in the electoral system.

The civil society elections observation organisation, is not the first to express concerns over the proposed decision of ECSL to conduct the 2023 elections using the PR System.

Several dissenting opinions have been expressed by some Civil Society Organisations and opposition political parties, including the main opposition All Peoples Congress party (APC).

In their letter dated 26th October 2022, NEW noted that they write in the public interest, to seek a comprehensive explanation from ECSL on the status of the August 2022 Boundary Delimitation exercise for the purposes of the 2023 general elections.

New also requested for the Commission's justification for the proposed change in electoral system from the Constituency-Based First Past the Post (FPTP) electoral system, to the District Block Proportional Representation (PR) system.

The ECSL Chairperson, Mohamed K. Konneh had earlier tweeted on Thursday 20th October 2022, in which he informed followers about a fundamental constitutional issue regarding changes in the electoral system.

The tweet was later followed by a press release dated 21st October, 2022 in which the ECSL, referenced section 38A of the 1991 Constitution of Sierra Leone and other relevant provisions.

The ECSL chairman informed the public that, following directives from President Julius Maada Bio, the 2023 multi-tier elections will be conducted using the Proportional Representation (PR) system.

"In our view, we think the decision on the choice of an electoral system (which is constitutional) is too important an issue for the public to be informed via a tweet. Notwithstanding, it is the view of NEW that the public deserves a comprehensive explaining on the justification(s) and need for the change in our electoral system, less than nine months to our general elections," the letter reads.

NEW says it request is critical because, there has been little discussion of such a system and the electorate has virtually no comprehension of how this system will work at this point.

NEW express in their letter that they will welcome the opportunity to meet with commissioners of ECSL in person to discuss these issues further.

"Finally, for the sake of good elections, peace and stability, it will be vital that as a nation, we arrive at common understanding of the rationale behind these changes, and a consultative process take place in order to collectively find solutions to these outstanding, critical issues that we have raised in this letter".

MEV-SL boosts education, feeds vulnerable people in Kailahun

By Hassan Gbassay Koroma

With the aim of keeping more vulnerable children in school, Movement for the Emancipation of Vulnerable Sierra Leone (MEV-SL), yesterday Thursday, October 27, donated learning materials worth millions of Leones to over 200 pupils in Kailahun District.

The organization also donated food items and cash to the aged and vulnerable people in different communities.

The donated items include school bags, books, pen and pencils and mathematic sets. They further donated over 50 bags of 25kgs rice to the vulnerable women in two villages respectively.

Speaking at both event at Siam Village, Upper Bambara Chiefdom and Nghun Village in Malema Chiefdom, National Coordinator of MEV-SL, Mamoud Mansaray, said the donation was the organization's way of promoting education in that part of the country and ensure that every child has the opportunity of going to school with the appropriate learning material.

He said education is the most powerful weapon that can be used to fight poverty and transform a nation, which was why they decided to reach out to some of the most deprived communities in that part of the country and give vulnerable children the opportunity to be educated.

He said he believes the donated materials will encourage and keep those children in school and promised that they are going to do more for children in those communities as time goes by.

Paramount Chief of Malema, Chiefdom Lamin Ngeva, said he was very impressed that his chiefdom was benefiting from the organization's good gesture and called on the children to ensure that they make good use of the learning materials and take their studies very seriously.

Representing the Paramount Chief of Upper Bambara Chiefdom, Chief Musa Moi Foray said they were very happy that the organization decided to help children in the community.

He said the children are the future leaders of the community and the country as whole, which was why they need to be taken care of and also called on the parents to make school a priority for their children.

Chief Executive Officer of MEV-SL, Fatmata Kumba, said she just wanted to give children hope in those villages and encourage them to go to school, because education is what the world needs right now.

"Your story is not different from mine, just like you, I used to walk miles with no proper school materials to go to school. Seeing you like this I just remember my days when I was going to school without bag and shoe," she said.

She further noted that even though she went through all of that her only one dream was for her to be educated and become someone in future.

"It pains me to see children still going through the same situation I went through in my days, that is why I have decided to help out of the little God has given me," she said.

The donation ceremony was witnessed by other personalities including officials from the Ministry of Basic and Senior Secondary Education, Ministry of Gender, Sierra Leone Association of NGOs (SLANGO) and others.

UNFCCC report: Governments climate plans not enough to limit global warming

By Alfred Koroma

A new report published on Wednesday by the United Nations Framework to the Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) has warned that plans submitted by most signatories of the Paris Agreement to reduce global greenhouse gas emissions are still not ambitious enough to limit global temperature rise to 1.5 degrees Celsius by the end of the century.

Instead, the report says recently combined National Determined Contributions (NDCs) or countries' national efforts to tackle emissions and mitigate climate change, are leading the planet to at least 2.5 degrees warming, a level deemed catastrophic for people and nature.

The current plans show an increase of global temperature at 10.6 per cent rather than a decrease. But UN says it is an improvement compared to last year's report, which showed a 13.7 per cent increase by 2030, and a continued raise of emissions after 2030.

"The downward trend in emissions expected by 2030 shows that nations have made some progress this year," says Simon Stiell, Executive Secretary of UN Climate Change.

"But the science is clear and so are our climate goals under the Paris Agreement. We are still nowhere near the scale and pace of emission reductions required to put us on track toward a 1.5 degrees Celsius world", he warned.

Stiell emphasized the need for national governments to revisit their climate plans, strengthen them now and implement them in the next eight years.

The UN Climate Change report has come out at a time global leaders prepare for another UN Climate Change Conference (COP27) in Sharm el-Sheikh, Egypt. Sierra Leone, a signatory of the Paris Agreement will form part of that delegation in November.

Like other African countries, Sierra Leone is currently bearing the brunt of climate risks and hazards, the Minister of Environment, Prof. Foday Moriba Jaward said during validation workshop of the country's Nationally Determined Contributions (NDCs) over a week ago, stressing the need for a coordinated approach to address the related vulnerabilities of climate change.

Adaptation and building climate resilience remain Sierra Leone's priority response to climate change, the Environment Minister stated.

Passengers heading to United Arab Emirates (UAE)

It has been made clear that the United Arab Emirates (UAE) has not issued any visa ban on Sierra Leoneans trying to enter the country for business purposes, according to a press release issued by the Sierra Leone Embassy in the United Arab Emirates.

Recently, UAE announced visa ban on 20 African countries including Sierra Leone.

According to the Information Attaché at Sierra Leone Embassy in UAE, Mohamed Lamin Massaquoi, the Embassy has not received any information on same from official sources in the UAE and therefore considered the said report being circulated as false and misleading.

"Meanwhile, the UAE has recently introduced series of visa reforms, including but not limited to the reduction of the duration of tourist visas from three months to two months," he said.

He said there have been new criteria for citizens that want to enter into the country which could be found on the UAE Federal Authority for Identity, Citizenship, Customs and Port Security portal website at www.icp.gov.ae

"Consequently, we encourage all Sierra Leoneans planning to visit the UAE on tourism or business purposes to go ahead with their visa applications as planned. But however, the Embassy would provide additional details on this issue if there is any further development," said Mohamed Lamin Massaquoi.

Prince Harry And Meghan Markle donate to Nigerian flood victims

Meghan Markle and Prince Harry Foundation has donated an unspecified amount to charities working in Nigeria to 'help provide relief following devastating flooding' that has ravaged parts of Nigeria. This is coming after Duchess Sussex, 41, revealed she is 43 percent Nigerian after doing a genealogy test a couple of years ago. She said this in her latest Archetypes Podcast series released on Tuesday. In a press release that accompanied the episode, a Spotify representative confirmed that the couple's Archewell Foundation made donations to Save the Children and UNICEF. The devastating floods have been blamed on heavy rain and water released from a dam in neighbouring Cameroon.

More than 600 people have been killed and around 1.4 million have been displaced in the floods which destroyed 440,000 hectares of farmland across Nigeria.

Save the Children Nigeria tweeted: "More than 1.5 million children are at risk after devastating flooding in Nigeria."

"Prince Harry and Meghan Markle's Archewell Foundation has donated to Save the Children in Nigeria as our teams deliver life-saving supplies to affected families."

Ghana, Ivory Coast boycott cocoa meeting in Brussels over farmers' pay

Cocoa producers - Copyright © africanews 2022

The world's top cocoa producers, Ghana and Ivory Coast, are boycotting meetings in Brussels of the World Cocoa Foundation on cocoa sustainability this Wednesday and Thursday (October 26 and 27). Authorities in the two West African countries accuse multinational chocolate companies and traders of blocking measures to improve cocoa farmers' incomes. Ghana and Ivory coast's grievances concern the Living Income Differential (LID) set at a standard of $400 per tonne and charged on top of world prices. The LID was introduced in 2019 to guarantee cocoa farmers a minimum price that would improve the income of farmers, many of whom live in poverty. But commodity traders set a negative differential for the two nations at 260 dollars per tonne.

In July 2022 a further decision was taken to no longer sell their cocoa with negative country differentials.

Both countries account for about two-thirds of global cocoa production, but farmers in those countries earn less than 6% of revenues in a chocolate industry valued at more than $100 billion a year.

Arguing that farmers have always been given a raw deal when it comes to pricing, four civil society organizations in Ghana and Ivory Coast have thrown their weight behind the boycott.

The World Cocoa Foundation, a group representing 80% of the global market, says its 2022 meetings are to discuss steps to improve farmer pay, combat child labor and end deforestation linked to cultivation of the crop.

Protests against migration agreement between Libya and Italy

Human rights organizations demonstrated in Rome on Wednesday against the renewal of an agreement between Italy and Libya to prevent migrants and refugees from reaching the European coasts.

The demonstrators claim human rights are blatantly violated in Libya where migrants and refugees trying to cross the Mediterranean Sea.

The Memorandum of Understanding (MoU) on development, cooperation, illegal immigration, human trafficking, fuel smuggling and reinforcement of border security was signed between then Italian Prime Minister Gentiloni and Fayez al-Serraj, Head of the UN-backed Libyan Government of National Accord in February 2017.

According to the agreement, Italy was providing the Libyan coast guard with vessels and training to help them to tackle human trafficking and illegal immigration.

Part of the MoU also deals with the creation and support of centers in northern African countries, mainly Libya, to host migrants who are caught trying to illegally cross into Europe.

But NGOs say serious human rights abuses take place at the detention centers, and are calling for the MoU to be revoked immediately.

Unless the Italian government revokes it, the agreement will be automatically renewed for three more years.

HRW calls for investigations after scores of protesters were shot dead in Chad

Human Rights Watch (HRW) has called on Chadian authorities to conduct an "independent investigation" into the violent protests in Chad that left some 50 people dead last week.

"Security forces fired on demonstrators in several towns in Chad, including the capital, N'Djamena," HRW wrote in a statement on Wednesday referring to demonstrators being "beaten" and "hundreds" of arrests "during and after the demonstrations."

The human rights group called for an "independent and effective" investigation to determine "whether the use of lethal force by the security services was a justified and proportional response to any alleged violence," said Lewis Mudge, Central Africa director at Human Rights Watch.

The Chadian opposition had called for demonstrations on October 20 against the regime of the young General Mahamat Idriss Déby Itno, who had just extended a transition period to elections by two years.

This comes 18 months after he was proclaimed president - then at the head of a military junta - to replace his father Idriss Déby Itno, who was killed by rebels.

The transitional government acknowledged the deaths of some 50 people on October 20, saying that a dozen law enforcement officials had died fighting a violent "insurgency."

HRW said it was "unable to confirm" the deaths of law enforcement officials from "independent sources."

"The transitional government should ensure that its security forces refrain from using unwarranted and disproportionate force during demonstrations and respect the fundamental rights to life, limb, and liberty, as well as the rights of assembly and peaceful protest," said Lewis Mudge.

Independent experts from the United Nations and the African Union have condemned "the lethal repression of peaceful protests over the political transition period," expressing deep concern over allegations of hundreds of arbitrary arrests.

Gadhafi-inspired art awarded in Italy

Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi (R) is greeted by Italian Premier Silvio Berlusconi upon his arrival at Rome in June, 2009. He wore a picture of anti-colonial hero O. Al-Mukhtar. - Copyright © africanews ANDREW MEDICHINI/AP2009

Italian artist Alessandra Ferrini who is based in London won the MAXXI Bulgari Prize for her video installation titled "Gadhafi in Rome: Notes for a Film".

A video installation titled "Gadhafi in Rome: Notes for a Film", focuses on the Libyan leader's first official visit to Italy in 2009.

The work was awarded at the third edition of the MAXXI Bulgari Prize, in Rome.

Italian artist Alessandra Ferrini, was fascinated by how Gaddafi's friendship and cooperation visit followed a similar pattern to the three-act structure from playwrights.

"I think she (Alessandra Ferrini) developed a very particular, personal perspective in the research of social history, geopolitical history, which is not only very significant for the time now and also has a strong consistency", the artistic director of MAXXI and President of the International Jury of 2022 MAXXI Bulgari Prize said.

"She's also been able to develop a very strong multimedia language around this, and it shows particularly importance in terms not only the aesthetic but also of cultural relevance", Hou Hanru concluded.

"On the first day, you had a sort of inciting incident, which for me is Gadhafi wearing the image of Omar Al Mukhtar [Editor's note: a Libyan national hero who was executed by Italian colonial authorities for leading a guerrilla war against the Italians colonisation in the 1920s and 1930s] on his chest to sort of disrupt this ceremony of friendship", Ferrini told.

"And then day two followed up with a lot of conflict and in fact we have lot of protests on day two of the event. And then day three is supposed to be a resolution, which is sort of achieved by the commercial deals, economical deals that are really signed on the last day."

Western influence on teaching

One of the three finalists is Silvia Rosi, an Italian-Togolese artist.

Her collection on remembrance includes videos and photographs which address her family history and identity heritage.

Her project is dedicated to the Ewe and Minà languages, once spoken in Ghana and Togo.

"The title of the work, 'Teacher, don't teach me nonsense' is the title of a Fela Kuti album in which the artist talks about this strong Western influence in the school education process of many West African countries", the 30-year-old commented.

"I found it a good title because it denounces this Western influence but it also hopes for a teaching of African traditions and cultures."

The prize giving ceremony took place on Tuesday at the MAXXI Museum on Tuesday, October 25.

The third finalist is American sculptor Namsal Sledlecki.

The prize by the Italian National Museum of Contemporary Art and Architecture and Italian luxury goods brand Bulgari, aims to promote excellence among young Italian and foreign artists.

The works of all three finalists will be on show until November 22 at the MAXXI Museum.
